

Trainee Investment Analyst

The Company

Contrarius is a small, but established and successful, investment manager. We focus primarily on global shares and have a long-term approach with an investment horizon measured in years. The investment philosophy could be described as 'contrarian', and is based on proprietary research.

As an intellectually focused business, we depend on the quality of our people. Finding people who are curious, motivated, and share our long-term approach is difficult. We are patient and careful when looking for them. When we do find them, we try to make it easy for them to stay.

The Role

This is an opportunity for a bright, enthusiastic, thoughtful graduate to learn about the investment industry. We do not require any specific experience but the role needs a numerate degree with excellent grades from a reputable university. A demonstrable interest in financial markets is also required.

The main responsibility of the individual would be the analysis of global equities.

Why You Might Like Us

- Have the benefits of a small business, including direct access to the most senior management, and any management support you reasonably need.
- Start a career in the investment industry.
- We encourage long-term and diverse professional development. Contrarius may cover the costs of further relevant qualifications and training (including tuition, materials, and professional subscriptions).
- We reward high-performing, reliable colleagues who share our long-term mind-set at above-market rates. It makes no sense for us to give hard-to-find, valuable people reasons to leave.

Why We May Not Be A Good Fit For You

- You are motivated more by a nine-to-five job than by pride in your work.
- We expect our colleagues to go beyond minimum requirements.
- We need people who are able to consider their work analytically.
- You are impulsive and emotional rather than reflective and logical.
